

Buddha the Llama

My philosopher friends

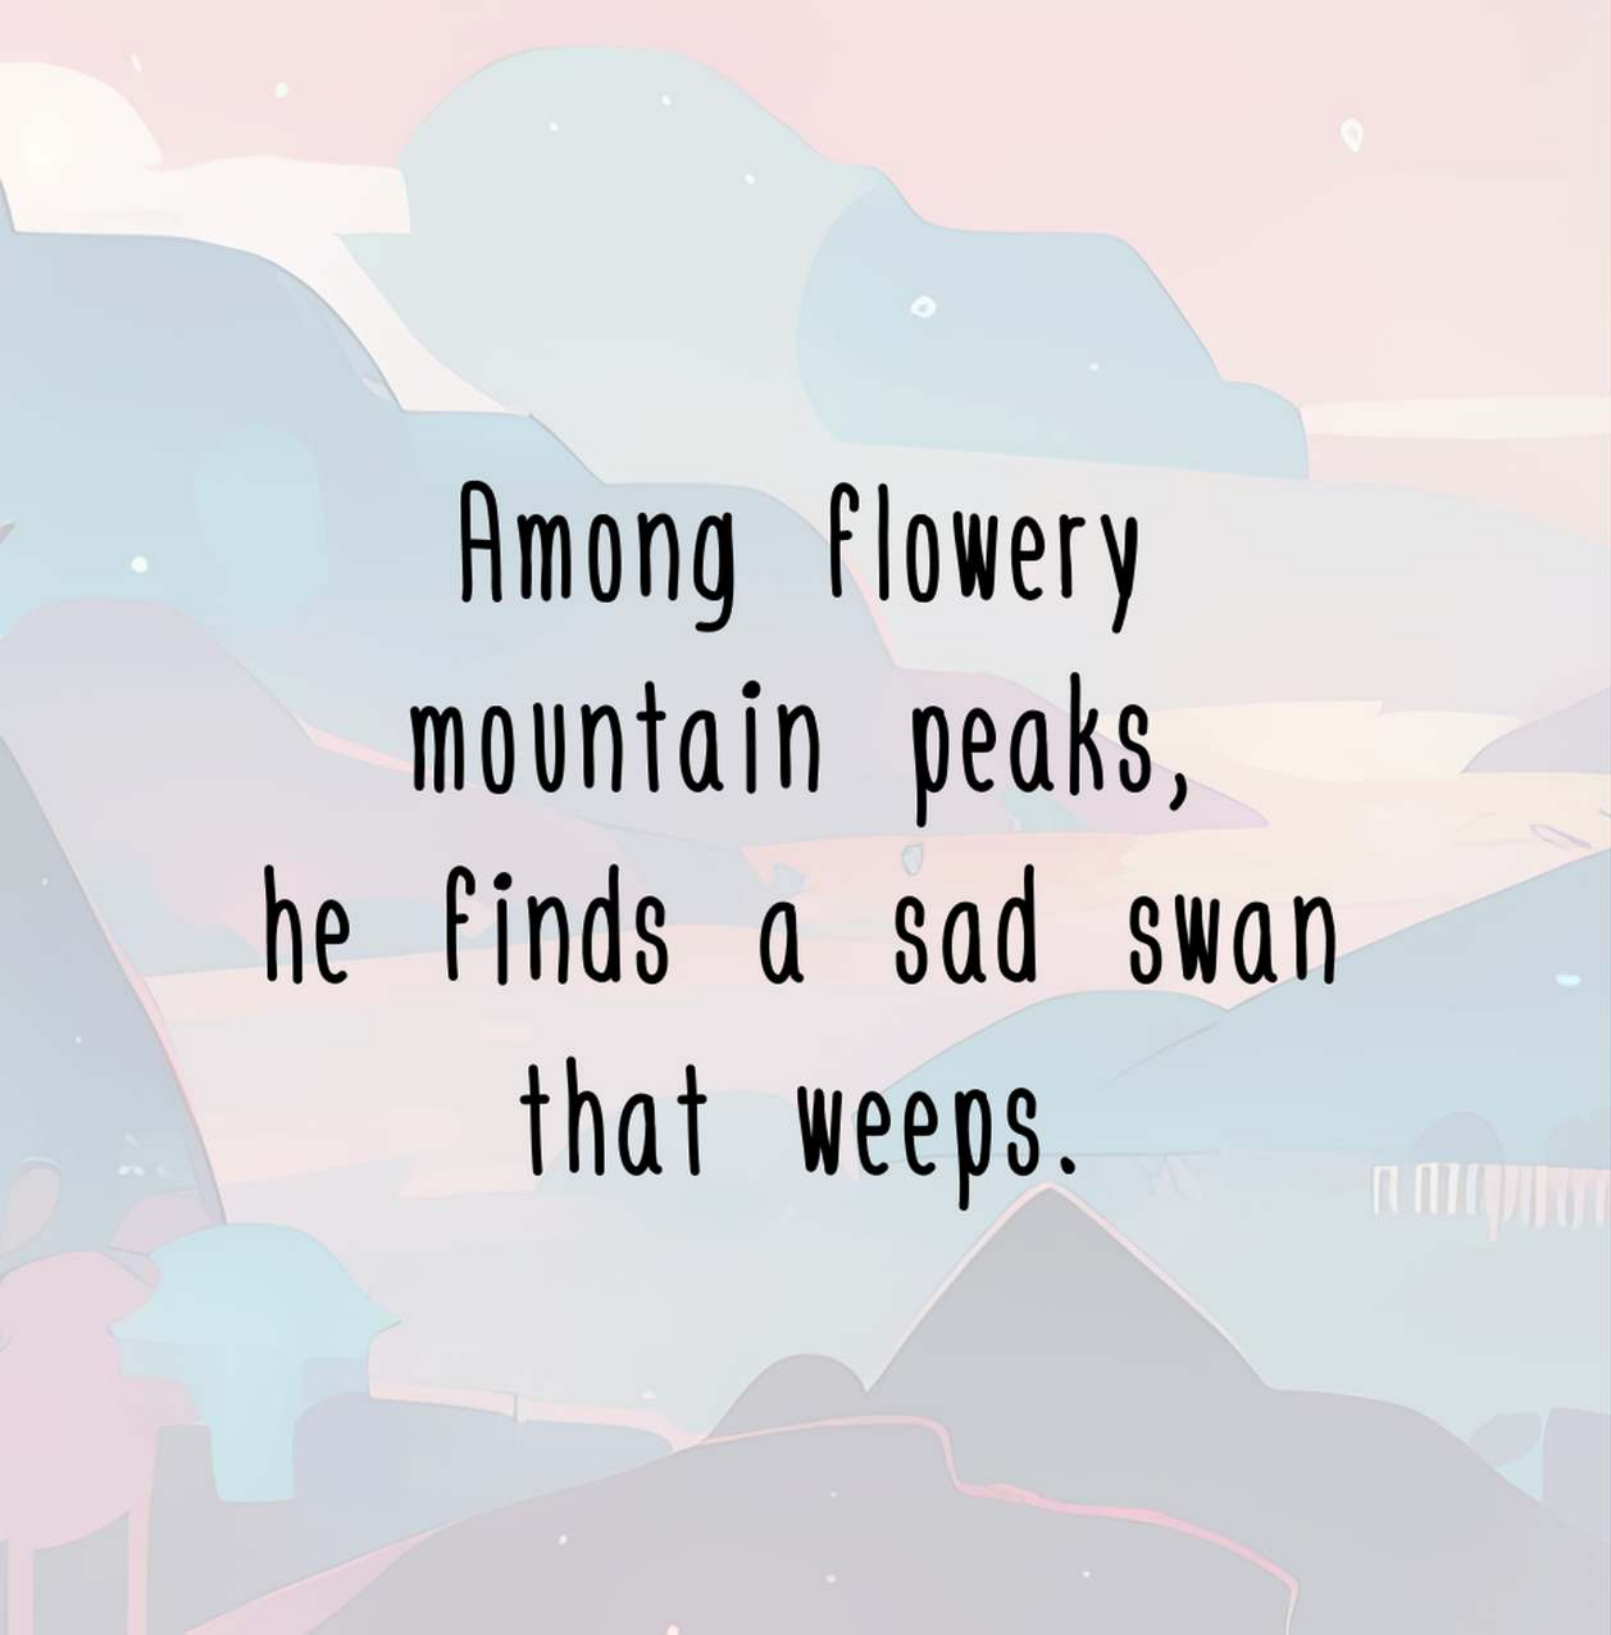

Georges Jeanres

The background is an abstract composition of various pastel-colored shapes, including shades of pink, light blue, and pale yellow. These shapes are layered and overlap, creating a sense of depth and movement. Some shapes are sharp and angular, while others are more soft and blended. The overall effect is a dreamy, ethereal landscape.

Buddha the Llama
is the wise prince of the Himalaya.

Among flowery
mountain peaks,
he finds a sad swan
that weeps.

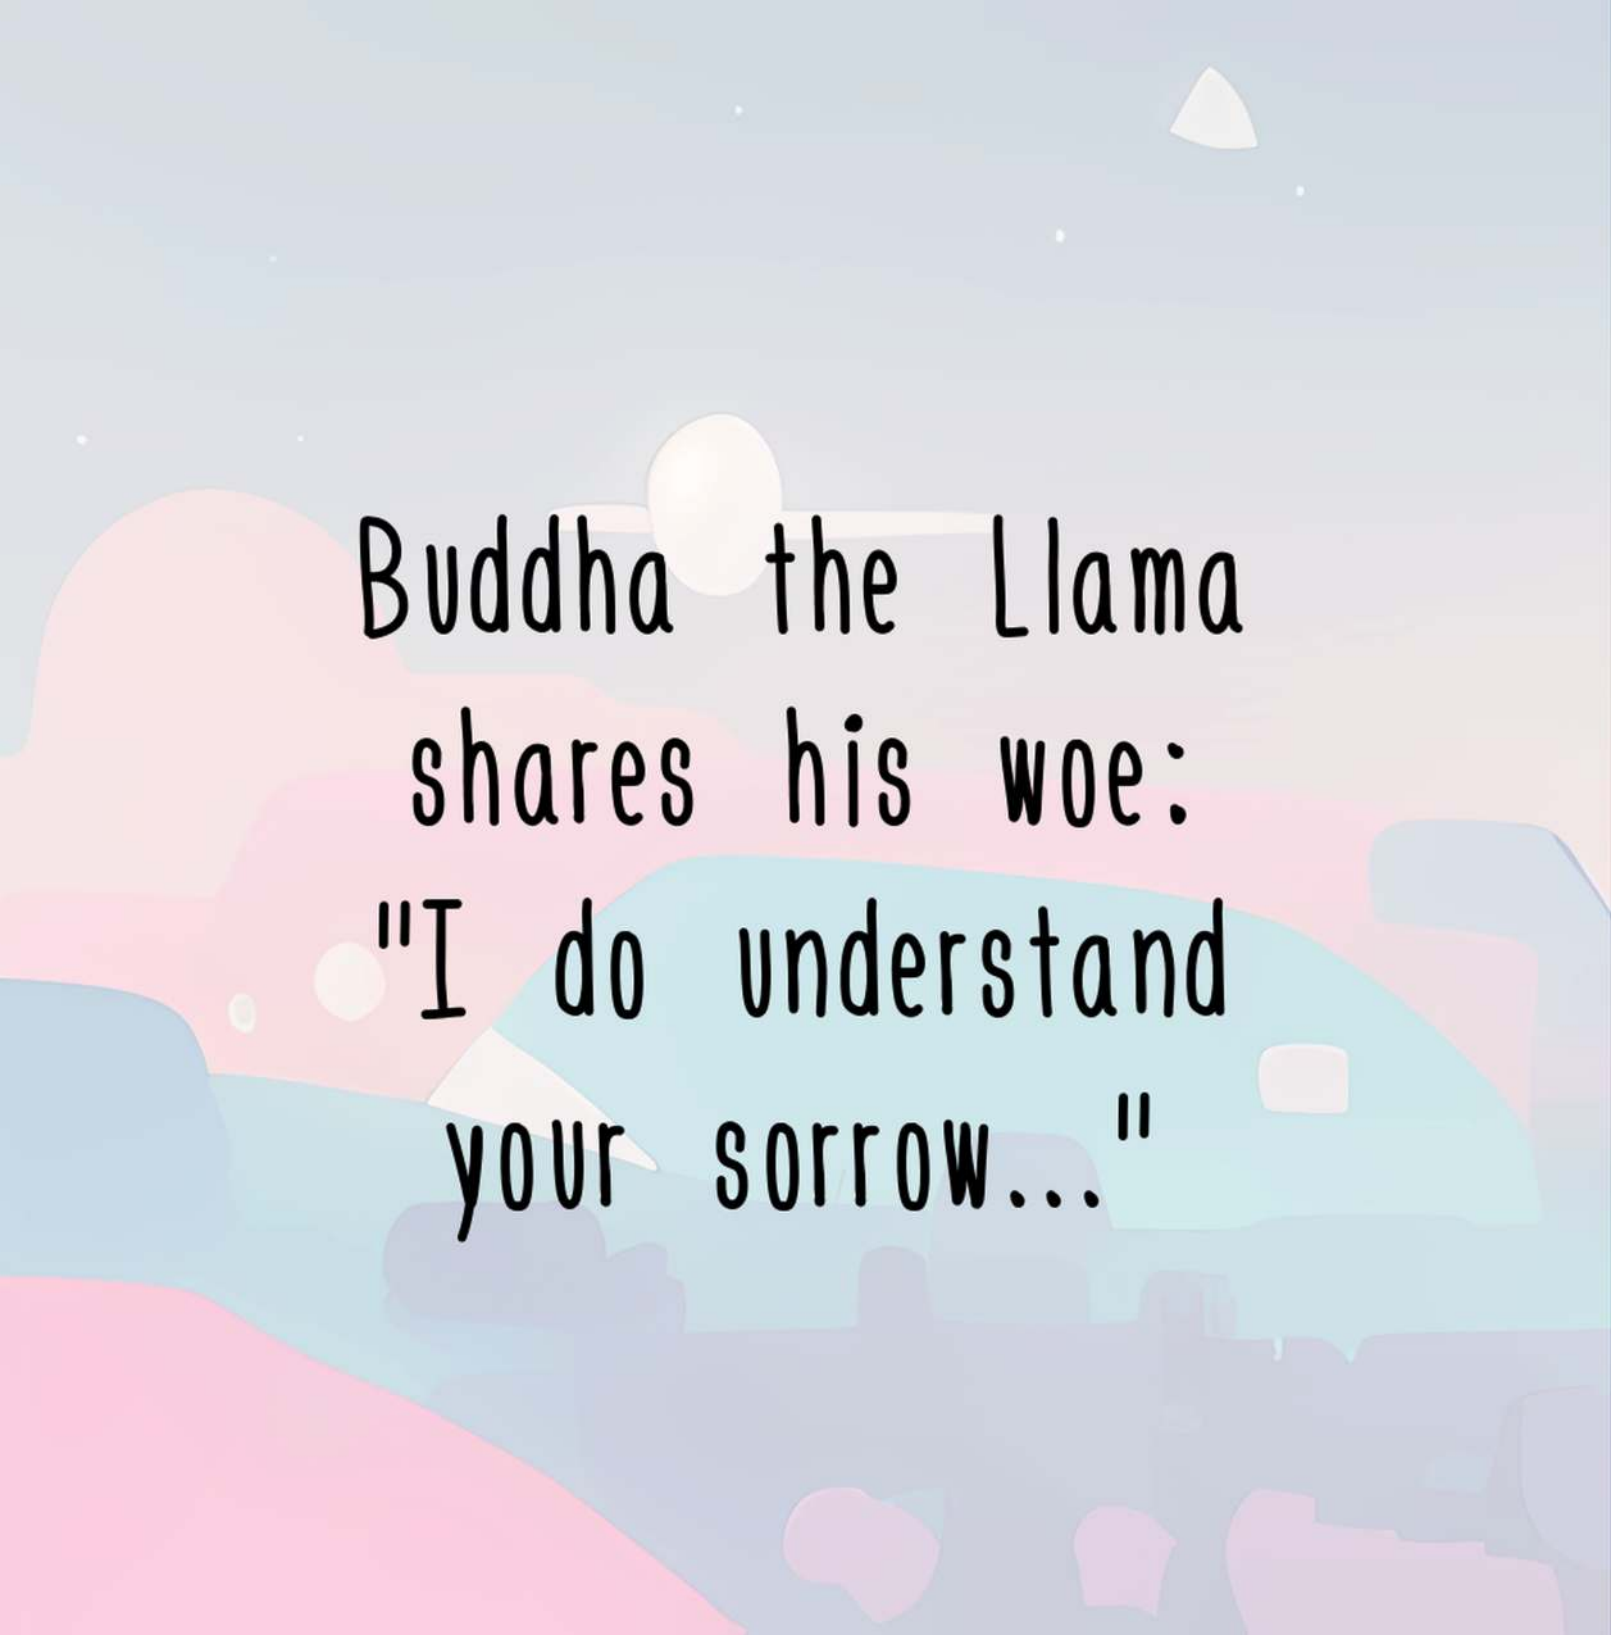

"I broke my wing,
I'm in great pain!
I'm sure I'll never fly again."

Buddha the Llama
shares his woe:
"I do understand
your sorrow..."

"But the root of your suffering
is in your mind,
not in your wing."

"One day, it's sure,
your tears will cease,
focus on how to reach
that peace."

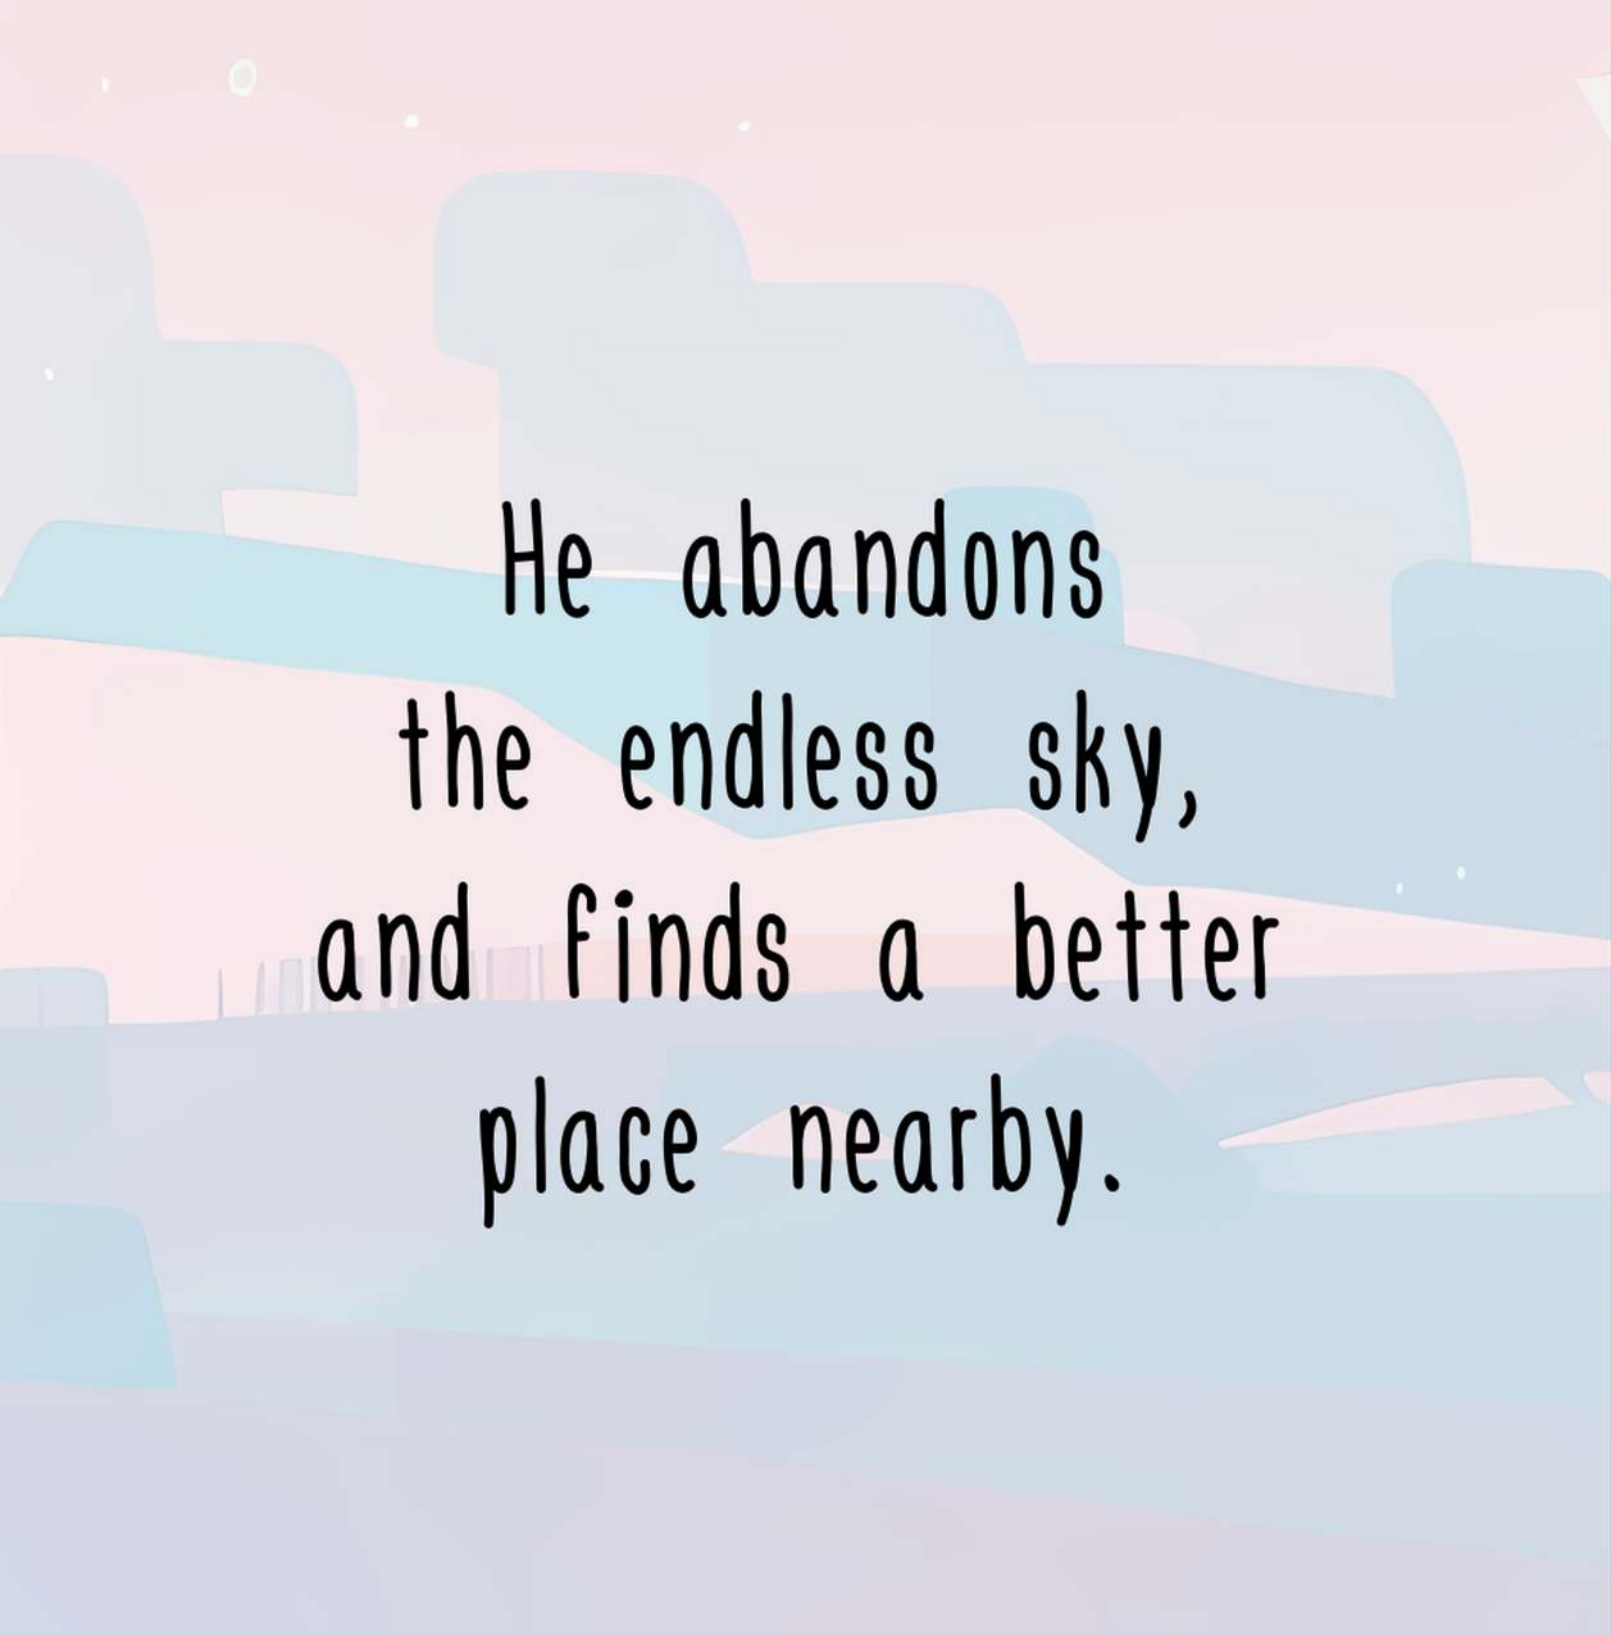

Looking at things
in a new way
the swan finds
a new hope today.

He abandons
the endless sky,
and finds a better
place nearby.

Never before did
this lake see
a swimmer so full of beauty.

FOR GROWN UPS:

BUDDHISM is a philosophy
developed by SIDDHARTHA GAUTAMA, who gave up being a prince
when he saw the pain of his people.

His thinking is based on the FOUR NOBLE TRUTHS:

- Yes, suffering exists.
- It has a clear cause.
- But it can also end.
- Therefore there is a way to reach that end.
